War—as Waged by German Submarines

It Consists in Casting Helpless People Adrift, Far From Shore, and Leaving Them at the Mercy of a Storm

Copyright, 1918, by the Star Company

The American people are not to be frightened by any submarine raid that can be made on this coast.

Sooner or later—sooner we trust—there will be no more German submarines.

Already their number has been greatly reduced on the other side of the ocean.

The vigilance of the navies of three nations has attended to that.

The Germans are building them faster than ever—but their number is not increasing—indeed it seems to be diminishing.

All that the Kaiser and his sea lords have done in this raid is to bring home to the American people the necessity of stamping out the Teuton method of warfare forever.

Americans will never forget that the German submarine commander of the U-151 cast adrift all the passengers of the Carolina—consisting of many women and children—and left them, fifty miles off shore, to the mercy of an approaching thunderstorm. The miracle that saved many of them was not of the German commander's doing.

It was as much murder to do what he did as it would have been had he sunk the Carolina with all on board.

This sort of thing is not war—it is cold-blooded assassination, and of harmless non-combatants.

The world will never be safe as long as atrocities like these are practiced.

The people of America are determined upon that. They are determined to win the war, and to stamp out such practices forever.

And the Kaiser's raid on our coast has only strengthened that determination and made every man and woman of America resolve so to end this war that such things shall never again be possible in a civilized world.

Why Not Make the Insects Economize on Food?

Protecting the Lives of Birds and Destroying Cane Would Do It and Save a BILLION DOLLARS EVERY YEAR

Copyright, 1918, by the Star Company

Mr. C. L. Marlatt, assistant chief of the Bureau of Entomology in the Department of Agriculture, gives facts on the cost of feeding our insects that ought to interest anybody with a brain bigger than that of the smallest of these insects.

First, observe what the insects do.

While we are told to economize in the use of grain, insects destroy millions upon millions in grain as part of their yearly diet. It cost at least ONE BILLION DOLLARS a year to feed the insects. And determined action by government, with proper protection for birds, would eliminate ninety per cent. of all this destruction.

It costs the United States fifty million dollars yearly to feed its grasshoppers, sixty millions to feed the chinch bug.

The Hessian fly costs us forty millions yearly, the cotton boll weevil, eight millions; the potato bug, eight millions; the army worm, fifteen millions, and even the small destructive cabbage worm eats up five million dollars' worth of cabbage a year.

Few Questions About a Poem either as to author or publication we are printing below a recently discovered poem (?) and we ask you is it real poetry?

The lines are as follows:

She shall speak to me, in places lone,
With a low and holy tone.
Ay! When I have lit my lamp at night,
She shall be present with my sprite;
And I will say, what'er it be,
Every word she telleth me.

This verse, which in the author's manuscript bears the title "She Shall Speak to Me," is said to be a response to one of the most glorious sonnets in the English language, inspired by one of the most passionate natures and greatest souls in modern literature.

What is poetry? Does this verse, which will be discussed by the most learned scholars and students of poetry on two continents, answer your definition of poetry?

Without knowing its author or its history, would you think it worth pasting in your scrap book or reciting to your friends?

How does it compare with your favorite poem, for, of course, you have one?

Do you think it as good poetry as Ella Wheeler Wilcox writes for you in this paper?

Perhaps some learned scholar of verse will tell us whether this is REAL poetry.

Julius Caesar Was Too Easy

More Than 1900 Years Ago, Recognizing the German Menace in Ancient Alsace, Caesar Chased the Army of Ariovistus Eastward to the Rhine; He Should Have Kept on Going.

One of the important features of tomorrow's Sunday ADVERTISER and AMERICAN will be an authoritative article on "The Meaning of Alsace-Lorraine" by Maurice Leon, Esq., a distinguished young attorney of New York.

Mr. Leon is the legal adviser to the diplomatic and consular representatives of France in the United States. He is widely known as a writer on international questions and the Great War.

He takes for his text a paragraph from the address of January 8, last, in which, addressing the Congress, President Wilson said:

The wrong done to France in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly fifty years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

Mr. Leon calls Alsace-Lorraine "a symbol of what must be undone in the world."

Nine of every ten Americans who know anything about Alsace-Lorraine know in a general way that by the Treaty of Frankfurt, in 1871, "settling up" the Franco-Prussian War, the two provinces were taken from France and annexed to Germany.

The people of Alsace-Lorraine were not asked what THEY thought about the transfer. THEY were not consulted about it. Every effort has been made to crush them and to drive the French out of them, but from that day to this they have protested against German rule and German oppression. They do NOT want to be German. THEY WILL NOT be German.

Germany calls the two provinces "Elsass und Lothringen." Her OFFICIAL name for them is "Reichland," which means "Land of the Empire."

It does not appear to have made MUCH difference WHAT Germany called them. The rest of the world has continued to know them as Alsace-Lorraine. And even THAT is not important. The important fact is that the people of the provinces have shown themselves to be spiritually invincible.

From the first day of her iron-handed control Germany relentlessly persecuted the French language—and everybody in Alsace-Lorraine can talk French.

Germany did her best to efface all the old landmarks; she proscribed every emblem that could possibly suggest the memory of happier days.

The native press was muzzled. Men were sent to jail for "whistling a tune." (The tune probably was the "Marseillaise," which Rouget de Lisle wrote at Strasbourg and which was played for the first time in the house of the Mayor.)

More than twenty years ago, a Boston man who made a studious tour of the two provinces reported that he could "feel war in the air."

From Basle up to Strasbourg, he said, "at the stations and in the cars I heard German; everywhere I saw German names and German signs. But everybody was reading 'Le Petit Journal.'" Railway conductors spoke to the passengers in German. The passengers replied IN FRENCH. They compelled the conductor to answer them IN FRENCH.

A party of four passengers consisted of the father, mother, a girl of sixteen and a child of three. The elders conversed in German but whenever anybody spoke to the younger child the words were French.

"It was easy to see," this traveler reported, "that at heart the Strasbourgers are French."

In the window of a grocery on the Broglieplatz he saw an exhibition of candles, white candles between two packages of red candles, all wrapped at the bottom in blue paper; the forbidden tricolor!

All this in Alsace.

Lorraine was MORE French. You no longer saw German but only French names. The Alsatians had looked German, bore German names, but were French at heart; in Lorraine, he "heard French on all sides," saw French men and French women, and saw French names like Antoine and Jacques.

Care was taken in Lorraine to post the names of the streets in BOTH languages. Immediately under "Koenigsplatz" one found the French equivalent, "Place Royale," and wherever "Notia" caught the eye, there also was "Avis."

From Caesar's day it has been the contention of Western and Southern Europe that Germany should STAY ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE RHINE. Your young son who is studying Caesar's Commentaries will be glad to read to you an account of Caesar's victory over the German king, Ariovistus. Caesar's men chased the Germans fifty miles out of Alsace to the Rhine.

The first fifteen delegates sent from Alsace-Lorraine to the Reichstag arrived with a resolution:

That the populations of Alsace-Lorraine, incorporated without their consent in the German Empire by the Treaty of Frankfurt, be called upon to pass specifically upon such incorporation. You may have read Bismarck's frank and brutal observation: It is not in YOUR interest that you conquered you, but in the interest of the Empire.

Mr. Leon, in the article to be printed tomorrow in the Sunday ADVERTISER and AMERICAN, makes clear France's refusal to come to terms with the robber, Germany, on any such basis as the return of the stolen provinces.

France is NOT at war "about" Alsace-Lorraine; but nobody need doubt that when the Germans are beaten France will get back the provinces torn from her forty-seven years ago.

To be SURE of a copy of tomorrow's Sunday ADVERTISER and AMERICAN, you will do well to ORDER IT TODAY. It will contain, in addition to Mr. Leon's article, more songs to send to the soldiers, a second installment of Goldburg's "Bob McNutt" (a biography in color), a four-page news-in-the-picture section (mostly Boston and New England), and the OPENING chapters of Elmer Glyn's NEWEST novel, "Where Love Leads."
